Location: IU Northwest, 3400 Broadway, Gary, IN 46408 in the Library/Conference Center 105 <http://www.iun.edu/~map/>

CONTENT: This advanced, intense five-hour workshop is designed to explore ways of providing ethical and accountable supervision in the clinical setting. The seminar introduces and examines the principles and best practice methods of supervision applicable to many settings in social work. The focus of the workshop is maximizing the educational and supportive functions of supervision in human service agencies. Learning principles and specific techniques will be applied to increase supervisory understanding, support, education, and evaluation of supervisees. In addition, the course will provide tips for evidence-based practice and opportunities for professionals to conceptualize their own approach to supervision utilizing strengths-oriented empowering strategies. A brief review of current treatment models and documentation as it relates to supervision with supporting hand-outs, templates, and references provided.

OBJECTIVES:

Define the principles of supervision including the process and uses of power and authority.

Discuss the education and support functions of the supervision and apply these concepts to practice examples.

Demonstrate knowledge of critical ethical and legal supervisory principles and obligations affecting the supervisory process including mandatory reporting and establishing no harm-no risk practices.

Apply knowledge of ethical decision-making to the process of supervision through application of case example and case study.

Apply knowledge of mandatory reporting and use of no-harm no-risk procedures.
